Some Mobilization Ideas from Mission Catalyst e-zine

1. Passport to Prizes

A church in northern Indiana solved a problem as old as missions conferences: We invite agencies to set up displays. We invite our congregation to visit the displays. But many of them don't, and the agency personnel end up lonely. Solution? Well, strategically placed donuts, of course. But also mock passports with questions inside that only can be answered by visiting the displays. Passports that are completed correctly are entered to win a prize. In this case it was a donation to your agency of choice, although an iPod full of John Piper sermons wouldn't be bad either!

2. Walk across the Room/Planet

A church near Baltimore has blown the lid off the normal one- or two-week missions emphasis time frame. They are taking two months this fall to focus on life beyond the walls of the church. Beginning with Bill Hybels' book Just Walk across the Room, they challenged the congregation to connect with people locally. Then they expanded the sphere and are devoting several Sundays to following Jesus into other cultures.

3. Global Sabbatical

When your pastor has regained consciousness after your request for a two-month mission focus, float this idea out to him: "What about a sabbatical that consisted of you spending four months traveling the planet with your wife, seeing firsthand the global work of God?" A pastor in the Northwest did just that. He applied for and was awarded a Lily Foundation Clergy Renewal Program grant. This grant enabled him and his wife to travel to several locations internationally, learn what God is up to, and be refreshed in their vision. (This will also speak to your pastor: The grant included funds to cover interim pulpit supply in the pastor's absence!)

4. From Baby Steps to Big Leaps

One church had a simple but potent flyer in their weekly program. It listed opportunities to step into other cultures beginning with things as easy as, say, reading National Geographic, but progressing to eating ethnic food, connecting with international students and refugees, and actually journeying overseas. (I swiped this and expect a version contextualized to my church will show up in our program before long!)

5. Sticker Shock

In a similar vein, a church celebrating their 25th anniversary is putting a different sticker on their program each week for 25 weeks that features some way the members can connect in service with the church and the world. One example is preparing Thanksgiving meals at a local homeless shelter.

6. Not for the Faint of Heart

Here's the last in the "ways to offer options to respond" series: Asbury Seminary published a devotional for the under-appreciated Christian season of Kingdomtide called Already! Not Yet? Their list of ways to live out the Kingdom of God include some easy ones, but I've been stunned by ones like #52: "If you've got an extra room in your home, open it up to a refugee living in America. You can find such a person in need through organizations like World Relief. Or maybe you can offer it to a family that just lost their house to foreclosure."

7. Videos that Stir Hearts and Challenge Minds

Here are two videos that have really connected with people this fall. It will take you 15 valuable minutes to watch both. It will be worth it, though. In fact, if you watch them both and are not moved, I'll buy you a milkshake!

A Thousand Questions. Thank you, Willow Creek.

A Land Called Paradise. Thank you, Kareem Salama and MAS Media Foundation.
